Some people have different stereotypes and assumptions about meditation and the community that practices it. Many see it as a spiritual activity, strictly for those trying to achieve enlightenment or awaken their chakras. This form does exist, but meditation is a very broad practice with many diverse applications. Some seek to gain spirituality, connect with their God, examine the depth of their inner self, or explore consciousness. Others are looking to develop love, compassion, patience, forgiveness, and other virtues. If these reasons don't speak to you, don't worry! Meditation is also a tool to break from the hectic, stressful situations we encounter in our everyday lives and learn to relax. It can be a source for tremendous insight into our personalities, consciousness, and the world around us. It helps with self-awareness and self-improvement. There are many options for all types of meditation; you just need to find the right one for you.
