Rhea had always instilled a sense of discipline in herself and found that the life she had created in the military helped her to keep that sense of order.

She worked hard to prove herself and rarely let herself have any fun, even though she is encouraged by her comrades. She believes, however, that if she slips once, it will be easier to slip again and therefore, she tries to stay away from temptation until her friends bring her on an underwater adventure at sea.

Having avoided the touch of a man for all her life, fearing that they would only be in it for “one thing”, there is something about the sea air or salt water that frees her spirit. Resulting in a change that brings about a desire to experience something she has always been denying herself...
