Three months have passed since Howie Farber last saw Samantha Caulfield, his best friend's daughter, and he identifies an article of clothing that belongs to her outside a tavern in Georgia. Somewhere inside, the kidnapper roams free, waiting to be caught. It doesn't take long for Howie to find the Hispanic man and to start a dialogue with Juan Estonches. Before the sun rises the next day, Juan finds himself in an unimaginable situation; Howie and the father of the missing child are there to interrogate him before they involve the authorities. The police become aware of the situation from a different perspective. When the wife of the kidnapper reports her husband missing, police initiate a search for a man they assume is the victim of a hate crime. Before they discover the truth, police officials, concerned wives and an accomplice will require the father and three friends to make decisions that run counter to everything they have set out to accomplish.
