How We Gypsies See The Americans

When I first started this project, to write a book that ended the stereotypes about Gypsies by answering questions outsiders had about us, I had sent a request out, for people to send me their questions. If they could ask a Gypsy anything, what would they ask? The request said, send as many questions as you like. Most people sent in multiple questions. I had originally planned on just one book, however, more than 2,000 questions came back and even if I only devoted a single paragraph to each question, it would be more than a thousand pages long, and I like to devote a bit of detail and several pages to each question. Thus a single book, became a series of books instead. I am trying to sort the questions by theme or topic, with a single theme per book.

Interestingly, I received quite a few questions asking in one way or another, the exact same question, which was: "There are a lot of stereotypes about Gypsies and Gypsies are seen in a certain way because of it. What I wanted to know was, do Gypsies have stereotypes about us Non-Gypsies? If so, what are they? How are Americans seen through the eyes of the Gypsies?"

And so that is the topic of this volume of the series: looking at the stereotypes Gypsies have about Americans and what Americans look like through the eyes of the Gypsies. Let's jump right in with:

QUESTION: Why do the Gypsies keep to themselves and not associate with the rest of us?
