All 105 Nobel Literature Prize Winners in One Volume The coming into being of this extraordinary book is based on the thesis that the wind is a phenomenon that is overlooked in literature. Not so much the kind of wind that sinks ships or brings down trees but the common everyday natural phenomenon that is felt as a more or less cursory displacement of air. This wind, that breeze, one reads less about than properly chimes with the place and significance it presumably inhabits in the physical experience of the people and circumstances described by writers. In this anthology however the wind is surprisingly referred to - in a short passage - by all hundred and more winners of the Nobel Prize for Literature, both those known and those unknown to you ... up until now! This volume comprises a compact disc containing the bio- and bibliographies of all the authors and a substantial 'Justification' written by the editor, professor Alexander L. Mohr.
