...contemporary with St. Augustine and St. Jerome, who settled in Africa in the early part of the fifth century, gives the following account of a plague of locusts:--" In the consulship of Marcus Plautius Hypsaeus and Marcus Fulvius Flaccus" (about the year of Rome 628, and 125 years before the Christian era), "when Africa had scarcely recovered itself from the miseries of the last Punic war, it underwent another desolation, terrible in its effects, and contrary to all experiences. For, after that immense numbers of locusts had formed themselves in a huge body all over the region, and had ruined all hopes of any fruits of the earth; after they had consumed all the herbage of the field without sparing the roots, and the leaves of the trees with the tendrils upon which they grew, and had gone so far as to penetrate with their teeth through the bark, however bitter, and into the dry and solid timber; by a sudden blast of wind they were wafted away in different portions, and having for a while been supported in the air, they were ultimately all plunged into the sea. After this, the surf threw up upon that long extended coast such immense heaps of their dead and corrupted bodies that there ensued from their putrefaction a most unsupportable and poisonous stench. This soon brought on a pestilence, which affected every species of animals, so that all birds, and sheep, and cattle, also the wild beasts of the field, died; and their carcasses being soon rendered putrid by the foulness of the air, added greatly to the general corruption. In respect to men, it is impossible, without horror, to describe the shocking devastation. In Numidia, where at that time Micipsa was king, eighty thousand persons perished. Upon that part of the sea coast which bordered up...
